

Presentation of the authors

Jan Bohlin is a teacher and researcher in economic history at the Department of Economic History, School of Business, Economics and Law, University of Gothenburg. His main field of interests lies in quantitative economic history of the late nineteenth and twentieth century. He has published in international journals in economic history.

Rodney Edvinsson is PhD in Economic History and researcher at Stockholm University. His research fields are: historical national accounts, economic growth from the Middle Ages to the present, agrarian history, price history and monetary history. He is also the editor of Historia.se.

Bo Franzén is a senior lecturer at Department of Economic History at Stockholm University. Mr. Franzén is a former secondary-school teacher who in the last one and a half decade has done research about markets and their participants in medieval Sweden.

Tor Jacobson is head of research at Sveriges Riksbank. He has previously worked at Uppsala University and at the Stockholm School of Economics. His published research is in the fields of empirical macro and empirical banking, and in statistics.

Håkan Lobell (PhD) is Assistant Professor in Economic History at Lund University. His main research interests lie in fields of monetary and financial history and long term economic growth and change. Recent research has focused on historical national accounts for Sweden, historical monetary and financial statistics and growth and stagnation in the Western European economies.

Svante Prado is Ph.D in economic history at the Department of Economic History, University of Gothenburg. His dissertation was completed in 2008 dealing with Swedish factor prices and productivity in international perspective, 1860–1950. He is currently working on Swedish wages and labour markets in the 19th and 20th century as well as early 20th century international comparisons of labour productivity.

Johan Söderberg, Professor in Economic History at Stockholm University. His research interests involve medieval and early modern price history as well as the history of climate.

Daniel Waldenström is a research fellow at the Research Institute of Industrial Economics (IFN) with doctoral degrees in both economics and in economic history. His research interests involve income and wealth inequality and historical financial development.