Further monetary policy measures

Decision by the Executive Board

The Executive Board decides that

1. during the period July-December 2017, the Riksbank will purchase nominal Swedish government bonds for a nominal amount of SEK 7.5 billion and real Swedish government bonds for a nominal amount of SEK 7.5 billion over and above purchases of nominal and real Swedish government bonds decided earlier and in accordance with the description in the annex,
2. the Head of the Markets Department is given, with the right to delegate to another person and after consultation with the Head of the Monetary Policy Department, with the right to delegate to another person, the task of determining the precise details regarding the terms for, and information on, the Riksbank's purchases of bonds and its reinvestments attributed to these purchases, and
3. these decisions will be published on Thursday 27 April 2017 at 9.30 a.m.

Background

To safeguard the role of the inflation target as nominal anchor for price-setting and wage formation, monetary policy in Sweden, as in other countries, has gradually become more expansionary. The Riksbank has cut the repo rate to -0.50 per cent, adjusted the repo-rate path downwards and carried out extensive purchases of government bonds.

The aim of the expansionary monetary policy is that inflation in Sweden will stabilise around the target of 2 per cent and that inflation expectations shall be compatible with the inflation target. High confidence in the inflation target creates the conditions for efficient price-setting and wage formation, thereby contributing to good economic development in Sweden.

The Riksbank's expansionary monetary policy has had a broad impact and pushed down interest rates in the Swedish economy. Monetary policy is considered to have contributed to the positive development in recent years, with good growth, falling unemployment and rising inflation. Long-term inflation expectations have risen and are now close to 2 per cent.

Considerations

Since the February Monetary Policy Report was published, there have been further signs that the international economic upswing is continuing, in line with the Riksbank's forecasts. However, there is considerable uncertainty and there are several risks of setbacks. The overall picture of a positive development in the Swedish economy still stands. Resource utilisation is assessed as higher than normal and economic activity is expected to continue to strengthen in the coming years.

However, inflation is still too low and is only expected to show a moderate increase in the coming year. New information indicates that cost pressures will rise more slowly in relation to the earlier assessment and the inflation forecast has therefore been revised down.

Monetary policy needs to be somewhat more expansionary to support inflation. The Riksbank should thus, as a complementary monetary policy measure, buy further nominal Swedish government bonds to a nominal value of SEK 7.5 billion, as well as real Swedish government bonds to a nominal value of SEK 7.5 billion. These purchases should be made during July–December 2017.

The Riksbank's overall purchases of nominal and real Swedish government bonds in accordance with this decision and earlier decisions will thus at the turn of the year 2017/2018 amount to SEK 290 billion, of which SEK 252.5 billion concerns nominal government bonds and SEK 37.5 billion concerns real government bonds. The total purchase volume corresponds to around 39 per cent of the outstanding volume of nominal Swedish government bonds and around 20 per cent of the outstanding volume of real Swedish government bonds denominated in SEK on the Swedish market. The holdings of government bonds shall be recorded at their market value in the Riksbank's balance sheet.

These purchases should cover nominal and real Swedish government bonds with maturities of up to 25 years, to have a broad impact on interest rate-setting. The purchases should be made by means of a bid procedure via an electronic platform in which the Riksbank's monetary policy counterparties and the Swedish National Debt Office's current primary dealers in government bonds have the opportunity to participate. In this way, the pricing and allocation of the Riksbank's transactions will be transparent to the market. Moreover, the bid procedure is a useful way of achieving an efficient implementation of the current monetary policy measures, taking into account the prevailing market conditions for nominal and real Swedish government bonds.

It is considered appropriate that the Riksbank's purchases of government bonds continue to be implemented weekly and on the secondary market. The Riksbank's counterparties in the bid procedure should, according to the terms and conditions for these, ensure that the purchases do not cover bonds that the counterparties have acquired directly from the Swedish National Debt Office for the purpose of selling them to the Riksbank. Given that the purchases should not be made in direct connection with the Swedish National Debt Office's issues on the primary market, it may still be appropriate to make the purchases of nominal government bonds and real Swedish bonds on different dates.

The nominal and real Swedish government bonds that are included in the Riksbank's holdings at any point in time will fall due for repayment. The Riksbank will in addition receive income from its holdings of government bonds in the form of coupon payments. If no reinvestments are made, both the Riksbank's holdings of nominal and real Swedish government bonds and the banking system's liquidity surplus in relation to the Riksbank will decrease. To maintain an expansionary monetary policy, the Riksbank should continue to reinvest both the repayments it receives upon maturity and the coupons. Pursuant to the Executive Board's decisions on 10 February and 20 April 2016, which apply until further notice, the reinvestments shall be made by means of the Riksbank purchasing Swedish government bonds over and above the bond purchases the Board has decided on earlier and may decide on in future. Moreover, when making reinvestments during 2017, consideration shall be given to the Executive Board's decision on 20 December 2016, which prescribes that reinvestment of the sum of around SEK 30 billion that largely concerns repayments on maturity of the Riksbank's holdings of Swedish government bonds in August 2017 shall begin after the turn of the year 2016/2017 and continue throughout the year.

In a manner corresponding to the purchases implemented so far and the coming purchases of government bonds, the reinvestments should continue to comprise nominal and real Swedish government bonds with maturities up to 25 years. The reinvestments should also be made by means of a bid procedure via an electronic platform in which the Riksbank's monetary policy counterparties and the Swedish National Debt Office's current primary dealers in government bonds have the opportunity to participate. In this way, the Riksbank can maintain a transparent and efficient implementation of the appropriate monetary policy measures, taking into account the prevailing market conditions.

As with the purchases of government bonds, the reinvestments shall be made on the secondary market. It may also be appropriate to continue to make reinvestments in nominal and real Swedish government bonds on different dates, as the Riksbank should not acquire government bonds in direct connection with the Swedish National Debt Office's issuance on the primary market. The reinvestments should likewise continue to be made in connection with the Riksbank's new purchases of nominal and real Swedish government bonds. This means that the purchase amount on individual occasions may vary over time and be larger than is indicated by the current decision on new purchases of government bonds.

The current purchases and reinvestments are justified in terms of monetary policy as stated above. They are assessed as being compatible with the appropriate provisions regarding monetary financing, cf. the European Court of Justice's decision on 16 June 2015 in the case C-62/14 Gauweiler and others. More exact details regarding the terms for, and information on, the Riksbank's purchases of, and reinvestments in, bonds should be determined by the Head of the Markets Department after consultation with the Head of the Monetary Policy Department.

In the same way as with a repo-rate cut, the Riksbank's purchases of both nominal and real Swedish government bonds means that interest rates in general are being pushed down. But although the Swedish economy is currently well-equipped, negative surprises can occur in the future that make it necessary to adapt monetary policy further. The Riksbank therefore is still prepared to make monetary policy even more expansionary if the upward trend in inflation were to be threatened and confidence in the inflation target weakened. All of the tools that the Riksbank has described earlier, most recently in the September 2016 Monetary Policy Report, can as always be used if necessary.
